CHAPTER ONE

INTRODUCTION AND BACKGROUND OF STUDY

1.0 INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background to internship

Since the 1970s universities, in development countries started introducing academic departments to promote and enhance the teaching tourism at university level. This arose from a recognition that tourism was significantly taking up a position as the world's single largest industry. This scenario has not changed in any way: and instead the 21st century forecasts indicate that there is great potential for continued growth in the tourism sector than most other sectors. This is true even in the east African region where Uganda lies. Tourism as a professional academic discipline is not well established in most universities and institutes in developing countries. The situation is worsened by the few fully established tourism programs in African universities. The department of geography, Makerere University saw this need and started a bachelor of tourism program in 1997 as a stepping stone for the establishment of the department of tourism and hospitality management in future.

Tourism has a well-defined academic community and borrows some concepts and theories from other disciplines to help investigate and explain particular phenomenon and practices of tourism. In the revised tourism programme, we consider a substantial contribution from three disciplinary perspectives necessary for a bachelor of tourism that operates on the knowledge based platform as indicated below:

Environmental and geographical sciences

Economic sciences (marketing is the core discipline, but economics and management sciences are relevant)

Social sciences (sociology is the core discipline, but contributions from psychology, anthropology, history, law and political science are regarded relevant)
